Free Speech is Dead!
Long Live Free Speech!

By Alison Chabloz

Many thanks to all those who turned up in support yesterday (25th May). Press photographers were particularly aggressive: "Are you famous or something?" joked one supporter. The BBC's Martin Bashir managed to ask one question about the judge's remarks on my 'grotesque and shocking' language ( = song lyrics). I just had the time to respond with "First, they came for the singers," before Mr Bashir and his recording gear were unceremoniously blocked by a couple of hefty loyal comrades.

In such circumstances, it's wise to prepare for the worst whilst, at the same time hoping for the best. There is no shame in having been wrongly accused. In any case, what can we expect from a 'justice' system that fails to deliver justice to e.g. victims of known paedophiles, preferring instead to go after an artist? Corrupt to the core doesn't cover it. We live under tyranny and my trial is a shining example. As I said before yesterday's verdict, if I am found 'not guilty' it will be a miracle. The judge had to convict me for all three songs. Miracles do happen, but not yesterday. In the words of a recent song – banned of course by YouTube:

"Find me guilty
Go on, do yourself a favour
Find me guilty
Just look at my bad behaviour…
If you will not fight the system
Then take whatever's mine
Find me guilty, find me guilty
I'll be fine"

For the Record: Tall Poppy Syndrome and The Plight of British Nationalism

Support for my right to freedom of expression was never going to strongly manifest itself in mainstream press reports. Social media provides a more balanced outlook, although most alt-lite personalities dare not broach the subject of my prosecution. It was interesting to note some tentative mainstream support for Markus Meecham aka Count Dankula (https://youtu.be/rF-iAWLFg1Q), found guilty last month in Scotland of causing gross offence after teaching his girlfriend's pug to lift its paw on the command 'Gas the Jews!'.

Meecham now has over 90,000 Twitter followers and 170,000 YouTube subscribers: being found guilty certainly hasn't put a spanner in his works. Contrary to my songs, it seems Count Dankula's mischief-making is not considered to be that much of an effective weapon against New World Order orthodoxy. Indeed, Meecham has since been compensated for his sins with a media career. Even Tommy Robinson turned out to report on the recovering communist's trial. Doubtful that Israel-loving Yaxley-Lennon (a.k.a. 'Tommy Robinson') will be doing the same when the time comes for my verdict to be pronounced. Also unlikely that Ricky Gervais, David Baddiel and Jonathan Pie will be voicing their concerns – as they did regards Meecham – if I, too, am found guilty.

Without doubt, the most significant moment during my cross-examination last month by CPS barrister, Karen Robinson, was her claim that my heartbreak over the incontrovertible disappearance of the white race was 'nothing more than racism (https://twitter.com/Ironwand/status/971694910863761408)'.

Significant in that Ms Robinson's loaded affirmation puts into perspective the chances of patriots on trial for speech crime – never mind those of sieg-heiling pug dog owners. The barrister's statement was also notable in that it provoked the only challenge from my own counsel, Adrian Davies, who described Ms Robinson's general approach as being akin to the persecution of heretics(https://alisonchabloz.wordpress.com/2018/03/14/filleted-emotionally-battered-but-still-undefeated/) during the Inquisition.

If Ms Robinson's attempt at turning my prosecution into a witch trial wasn't enough, since my prolonged ordeal began back in January, my songs have been subject to further criticism from other sources. Not from my accusers, nor indeed from the troops of Hasbara keyboard warriors – although inevitably there has been some of that. No, this criticism comes from within the revisionist-nationalist movement: namely, that my songs would form part of a reckless strategy which risks compromising other revisionists living in countries with no anti-revisionist legislation, i.e. Britain.

The first public utterances of this came via an article in French (a language I understand and speak fluently) posted by the revisionist press agency, Agence Bocage. The article (https://gayssoteries.wordpress.com/2018/01/24/laffaire-chabloz-entre-strategie-problematique-et-danger-reel/) is unsigned. However, having repeatedly heard this exact same 'strategy' argument for more than a year, in person, from one notable figure within the UK revisionist 'elite' – someone with contacts worldwide, in particular in France and Germany – it wasn't hard to put two-and-two together. Without wishing to go into too much detail, suffice it to say that I vigorously defended myself and my work from these malign smears.

Putting aside the smears themselves – hardly different in my view to those expressed by my accusers and their acolytes – the most troubling aspect of this personal attack was that it came at a moment when I was most in need of support during my trial, when I would be obliged to take the witness stand. Clearly intended to destabilise me emotionally, this unpleasant situation has also had a negative effect on my ability to produce the necessary goods, i.e. more songs, blogs and videos.

It is one thing as a white nationalist to feel betrayed by politicians, police, media and white liberal goys. It is quite another when the betrayal comes from those within the very movement whose supposed role is to defend nationalist interests. If I had not defended myself, the plotting may well have continued – perhaps by way of a bizarre attempt to bait me by trying to stir up resentment?

Confirmed by two recent Facebook sources, my story – persecuted and prosecuted for singing a song – is now being touted in reference to the unfortunate plight of another comrade-in-arms, Monika Schaefer (https://wir-sind-monika.com/). Granted, Monika's fine work could arguably be described as a song of apology to her mother (https://youtu.be/WxOmzT8tQ6E). However, condemnation of my satirical songs, when contrasted with praise extolled for speech crime in countries with anti-revisionist legislation, is troubling to say the least.

Another difference between my own case – located in a country without anti-revisionist laws – and Monika's, is that my alleged speech crime is indeed set to music. As I am also accused of using Jewish melodies to cause maximum offence, it's not only my lyrics that pose a problem. But why exalt one comrade for questioning the gas chambers in a country where this can land you in jail, whilst simultaneously opining that Chabloz' songs somehow represent a dangerous impediment to the revisionist cause? It just doesn't make sense.

Tall poppy syndrome? An underhand ruse intended at best to demoralise me to the point of quitting the movement or, worse still, wear me down to the point of changing my plea? Even more disturbing, as suggested by one colleague, was this internal smear campaign a gift meant for the attention of prosecutors and the court? Even revisionists find Chabloz' songs grossly offensive! (In my hypothetical defence: technically speaking, my most vocal detractor has never publicly questioned the official 'Holocaust' narrative and the author of the Agence Bocage article is anonymous).

If others – including the world's most notable revisionists – had sided with my critics in the ensuing Battle of the Wills via email, then I would be in a very dark place right now. Happily, apart from a couple of verbally abusive whiteknights – forced to dismount from their respective high horses thanks to a staunch defence of my position by several personalities – this was not the case. Nevertheless, if it had been the visible enemy waging yet another smear campaign against me, then this would have been easier to take in my stride. Ergo, no wonder British nationalism is in such a sad state.

Cutting down tall poppies may be one way of spoiling the chances of a nationalist revival. Indeed, certain species of weed, e.g. Japanese Knot Weed, benefit from a tenacious root system capable of decimating indigenous plant growth. If British nationalism is to make a proper come-back, then such weeds in our midst need to be eradicated. Some may display impressive blooms and evergreen foliage. But look a little closer and you will see how inflexible they are at the stem, how miserly and selective they are regards others' growth and contribution to the cause. Most telling of all, see how quickly they wilt whenever it's a case of publicly making statements about gas chambers used in the alleged industrialised extermination of Jews during WW2.

In this business, it's hard enough knowing who to trust. I prefer to rely on myself. No one wants to be made to look a fool – even less to have been duped for decades by deep state infiltrators whose agenda includes provocation, disruption and outright treachery. Since this split became apparent, I and others have worked hard to try and resolve it. On countless occasions, I have publicly stated that I am willing to sit face-to-face with my main critic and discuss these issues candidly and without prejudice. A sad irony indeed that a supposed champion of free speech would shun debate, effectively providing comfort and nourishment to the real enemy.

So-called comrades who initiated these attacks on my work during the most trying period of my life can rest assured that I shall not be throwing in the towel. I and several others believe that whatever the verdict next month, it's a win-win situation. I went down the legal route in order to challenge the official 'Holocaust' narrative in the courts, to bring publicity to the revisionist movement and to expose the malign effect 'denial' laws have on the right to freedom of expression in other countries. (Note, whilst British nationalist politics is seemingly splintered beyond repair, countries which do have such laws have thriving nationalist parties).

If I am found guilty, resulting in a legal precedent effectively outlawing questioning of the gas chambers, what will be the reaction of my in-house detractors towards others facing prosecution in the future? Will it be: 'Such a hero! Such bravery!' as in the case of Monika Schaefer and others? Will my name be dragged up, fingers pointing accusingly, 'All Chabloz' fault'?

Although Markus Meecham should never have been prosecuted in the first place, is his crass comedy in any way comparable to my revisionist musical satire? Will a guilty verdict resulting in de facto anti-revisionist legislation here in England prevent others from speaking out? In my view, it's far too late for that. At least Count Dankula's verdict serves to shed more light on the agenda of those ruling over us and who, accordingly, pull the strings of our elected leaders.

There is no doubt in my mind that a guilty verdict as far as my music is concerned will have been worth every note, every bar, right down to the final chord.

The Trial Result

Alison Chabloz was sentenced to 20 weeks imprisonment suspended for 2 years + EXTRAS

On Thursday the 14th of June 2018 Alison Chabloz was finally sentenced and was awarded 20 weeks imprisonment suspended for two years. This was two concurrent suspended prison sentences of 12 weeks for two of the charges for which she was convicted. A suspended sentence of eight weeks was passed for the third charge, to run consecutively.

The devil may be in the detail however. The EXTRAS.

Ms Chabloz was also awarded the following penalties.

Banned from posting anything onto social media for 12 months.

She was also ordered to complete 180 hours of unpaid work, as well as a 20 day rehabilitation program.

Exclusive! 'Fake News' ... an anecdote ...

The Rhodesia Broadcasting Corporation and 'Black Propaganda'

By John Ormowe, former RBC producer and Grey's Scouts trooper

'Fake News' is much on the net and airwaves these days, but really nothing new since McLuhan wrote 'The Medium Is the Message'.

Of course, it is a truism that all purveyors of means of mass communication, whether from the Guthenburg press to CNN have disseminated a subjective world view. Interestingly, there is a much mis-quoted aphorism about people being more inclined to accept the big lie, rather than a smaller one. No, it was not Goebbels who wrote that, but Adolf Hitler and not about his propaganda objectives, but as a description of the anti-German press owned by alien proprietors in the 1920s.

So, what was my paltry role in the dark arts of 'black propaganda'? First, to explain, 'black propaganda' does not mean scandalous, untruthful or distasteful manipulations of any 'truth', but simply 'propaganda' that purports to emanate from within the homeland of the enemy. The purpose of 'black propaganda' is to sew the seeds of distrust and demoralisation within the ranks of the enemy ... ironic that today the very 'authoritative' organs of mass communication within the West, such as the BBC, which had pioneered relentless radio black-propaganda into Germany in the War, now (often referred to as the 'Blatant Bias Corporation') assiduously serve to weaken and corrode the sense of identity of people in Britain.

Back to my meandering memory ... in the 1970s I worked as producer with the Rhodesia Broadcasting Corporation (RBC) in Salisbury, the then capital of Rhodesia, now 'Zimbabwe'. One day, the Director General of the RBC, Harvey Ward, asked me to write and present a programme to be called 'Povo do Mocambique' ('People of Mozambique') after the collapse of Portuguese rule there and the takeover by FRELIMO, the Marxist terrorist faction that supported the Mugabe-led terrorist incursions into Rhodesia. I explained that I had never been to Mozambique and knew no Portuguese (save some terms of romantic endearment) but Harvey retorted I simply had to resort to the age-old journalistic expedient of 'thumb-sucking'.

So it was I had an office, a friendly Portuguese refugee to translate, large wall maps and current Army intelligence reports on the situation in Mozambique. I would also stroll into the newsroom to scan the wire service updates on fresh Soviet/Warsaw Pact arms imports into the port of Beira.

My first inspiration was to 'invent' a Frelimo concentration camp in the Gorongoza National Park, then to ascertain the names of schools in Maputo (formerly Laurenco Marques), discuss suitable children's names with my Portuguese friend, so my first broadcast was to the children and parents of the 7th National School in Maputo to ask where their friends and families had disappeared to ... and we told them they had been taken to the Frelimo Concentration Camp at Gorongoza and would be unlikely ever to be seen again.

Subsequent 'Povo do Mocambique' broadcasts told of the scandalously corrupt lifestyle of Frelimo communist party apparatchniks, the worsening economic plight of the country and the murder by Frelimo death squads of farmers and businessmen. All very tame stuff (but nonetheless true) until ...

Then, one day, after a convivial lunch with RBC and Army friends, I was gazing at the wall map of Mozambique when I had a sudden inspiration. 'Why not, ' I asked my Portuguese friend, 'create an anti-Frelimo counter-revolution, say in the north of the country, far from the capital Maputo and the second city Beira ? And let's stir up the traditional tribal enmity up there and see what happens ...' .

That evening 'Povo do Mocambique' broadcast the dramatic news that the Frelimo garrison at Villa Cabral had been overrun by the heroic resistance fighters of the Makonde tribe. They had put the Frelimo Marxist cowards to flight, torn down the Frelimo flag of shame and appealed to all freedom-loving people to join them in their uprising . 'O people of the Mukua ...' (a neighbouring tribe to the south ) ' ... be like the Lions of the Makonde, rise up and shake off the tyranny of the Frelimo bandits !'

I thought that piece of black-propaganda melodrama could be filed away in the dusty archives of forgettable thumb-sucking journalism, when, about a week or so later, reports started coming in of tribesmen from Mozambique queuing at Rhodesian border posts and clamouring to be allowed in to join the 'counter-revolution'.

Now, of course, I cannot be credited with starting the Renamo resistance war against Frelimo, but this new anti-Frelimo resistance force certainly attracted recruits and a bitter civil war ensued in Mozambique.

That it ultimately didn't affect the fate of Rhodesia and South Africa can be explained that the former fought a brilliant counter-insurgency war against Marxist terrorism, but ultimately was unable to resist the forces of Anglo-American economic pressure on South Africa which threatened to withhold petrol and armaments supplies to that valiant and embattled country, the last hope for a civilised solution to the problems that beset Africa.

At Solstice time around the Stones,
And the poll tax riots at Trafalgar Square,
The rich they got richer, the poor were stripped bare,
Building new roads with no thought for the land, and the blood of the Beanfield is still on your hands,
Now drilling off Shetland will do you just fine,
And you wanted to sell off our forests,
Like you closed down the mines!

(Chorus)

There's nothing to see,
There's nothing to see,
There's nothing to see here,
There's nothing to see,
Won't you just look away,
There's nothing to see here.

England's green and pleasant land,
Is not there to put cash in your hands,
I see your symbol is the English Oak Tree,
Is that your idea of irony?
Now millions of eyes have turned upon you,
And each one is watching what you will do,
And all are ready to spoil your game,

Behind the lyrics of the song
We are the Sons and Daughters of Robin Hood

Damh the Bard wrote this song after hearing about the then Tory UK Government's plans to sell off England's forests. He just couldn't believe what he was hearing! They did a U-Turn on this plan in the end and he thought the song would never be heard, but when he heard that they were also thinking of scrapping the May Day Bank Holiday, and with all of the cuts and other problems in the end he just had to record it.
We should all be mighty glad that he did.
Most of the lyrics explain themselves however one may need more explanation. The Battle of the Beanfield took place over several hours on 1 June 1985, when Wiltshire Police prevented the Peace Convoy, of several hundred New Age travelers, from setting up the 1985 Stonehenge Free Festival 7m from Stonehenge. Fresh from smashing our tough white miners in 1984 the odds of 1,300 police against some 600 'hippies' with children was not one you would bet against.....

The word 'murder' derives from the word 'murdrum.' Murdrum was a fine imposed by the first Norman king of England, Guillaume I, (to the English William the Bastard) soon after the conquest of 1066, and it was designed to protect the Normans who had come to England with him. If a Norman was found killed and the killer was not known, the murdrum fine was levied on the inhabitants of the entire area in which the body was found. The murdrum fine did not apply to English corpses however.

Why would a law like this be necessary? Presumably because a lot of Normans were turning up dead in mysterious circumstances. Many would have been the victims of the people the Normans called the 'Silvatici' - the men of the woods, who were known to the English as 'green men'. The Silvatici was an underground resistance movement and it flourished for a decade after the Conquest. It was mass resistance from the Silvatici that led to the Norman Harrying of the North in 1069 - the land was stripped bare to leave them no hiding places - and to numerous other risings and rebellions which left a lot of Normans dead and made William's crown less secure than we may now assume. In fen, forest and field, it seems that a substantial proportion of the English population were prepared to resist their new masters.

Some of them remain legends to this day. On the fen island of Ely, an English landowner named Hereward resisted the Normans for years, building up an army of rebels, calling for assistance from the Danish king. When William personally intervened, in order to try and crush his rebellion, Hereward frustrated the king for years with tactics including the sacking of abbeys, the destruction of causeways and even the burning of the fens themselves. Over on the Welsh borders, an outlaw known as Eadric the Wild (or Eadric Silvaticus) refused to submit to the conquerer, and raised a rebel army which burned down Shrewsbury.

There would have been many more such rebels, forgotten now, who tried to hold back the tide of history. What do we remember of them today?

Perhaps the English archetype of the outlaw in the greenwood, of whom Robin Hood is the best - known exemplar, began in the 1060's, with the rise of the rebels in the forests, fighting for their land.

The Normans designed and had built churches and magnificent cathedrals to order.

Our stone masons had not only a pride in their work but also a great sense of humour. For in our old Norman churches we can still see the Green Men if we only learn to see clearly again. Those carved stone faces peering at us from their haloes of leaves are more politically charged than the enemy could ever imagine.

The name Green Man was apparently first brought into popular circulation by Lady Raglan in March 1939 in the Folklaw journal. He has many older names. Look locally and share them with us. He is the symbol of the eternal cycle of Nature, the mysterious figure who dies and is reborn each year.

President Trump*stein* Sold his Soul to the Devil Long Ago

By Mallificus Sentius

One must admit that it is completely understandable how anyone with even the slightest of patriotic leanings would have chosen Donald Trump over the hypocritical Hillary Clinton, whom having previously supported her own husbands philandering antics was hardly in a position to attack her opponents track record regarding women with any ardour. At the time, Trumps election was a hotbed of controversy but on balance his campaign winning speeches about "Making America Great Again" focused on putting American nationals and businesses first and the proposed 'turfing out' of illegal aliens served well to harness an instinct that, under normal circumstances, the powers that be, have strived to suppress in the general populace of most countries, to make all but forgotten outside of a subconscious notion. That is until, evidently, it suits their own ends. That instinct is one of self preservation, that charity begins at home and that getting your own house in order should be the overwhelming first priority, be it for the home or the State. Put your own interests first, produce for yourself first, then and 'only then' are you in a position to help your neighbours should they request it.

So on face value no-one can deny that even Trump's most controversial election policies and some of the policies introduced since he took office have been rooted in this collective survival instinct inherent in all sovereign nations and peoples. This subconscious, and needless to say, righteous notion is the primary and only motivational tool really necessary for leading the people to what ever ends be sought by those in power, whether that be to war in a foreign land or simply directing subversive or permissive agenda furthering policies at home. All such political battles are won on the premise of so-called freedoms of moralistic value in order that the voters can be swayed or feel justified in their decision. Countless times during his campaign interviews with the mainstream media, he used the mantra "they weren't expecting this to happen" & "I wasn't meant to be here" Which of course couldn't be further from the truth, but this idea further instilled in the public mind that this candidate was different from all the others. I have no doubt that those behind organising his election campaign saw that the timing was damn near perfect to marry it's self with the public opinion that yet another American president had turned out to be a complete failure for the people, just like the previous Bush administration, and after such hyped erm.. 'high' hopes too. Obama Care? Anyone?

I am sure there are some Trump supporters out there reading this enthusiastically shouting "Yeah!" that may well have not yet understood my sentiments entirely. Even though I agree with most of the reasoning and sentiment behind his voting supporters and resulting presidency. I make no bones in stating that Trump is not a supporter of the American people. Trump is a supporter of the financial elite that put him in office and nothing more. I said quite openly on local BBC radio last year that "No-one goes bankrupt that many times and manages to claw their way up to the presidency of the good old U S of A without a little help from elsewhere!" This statement was met with stony silence by the presenter of the show, but sadly this is the fundamental truth of the matter.

Above: Trump's son-in-law keeps a very close eye on 'The Donald'. Jared Kushner is also one of the few 'advisers trusted by Trump.
An orthodox Jew, whose wife Ivanka converted to Judaism before they married, Kushner and his family, naturally, have very strong connections to Israel.

Trump is a puppet, just the same as all the other American Presidents I can think of since the year dot, and if in some sudden moment of sincere moral impetus, Trump decides to go against his keepers wishes, he will end up knocking at the pearly gates and comparing notes with JFK! In fact, Benjamin Freedman's famous 1961 speech at the Willard Hotel* unwittingly shed an interesting shard of light on the potential reasoning behind the thirty fifth presidents assassination despite the fact that he was very much alive and kicking at the time this information was imparted. These people don't mess about when it comes to such conscientious discrepancies and will tolerate little deviation from their agenda, let alone challenges to their influence. As such they place no value on the lives of their puppets let alone that of the general populace. Dissenting voices beware!

It is interesting to note that its now a reasonably well known fact, at least to those who have taken time to study the issue, that Adolf Hitler in his rise to power was initially funded by and co-operated with the Zionists in Berlin. Woe Betide any former Mayor of London mentioning this! There is no doubt in my mind that Mr Trump can be viewed in the same light, the only difference being that some time after it's ascendancy, the national socialist government made a mockery of their banking system and kicked them out along with their other over represented peoples. Now don't go all sentimental on me and begin reciting the big long list of 'horrible facts' we know about Hitler. We have all had no choice but to learn them in school! The only comparison I wish to make is the fact that members of Trump's own family are married into these elite circles and the idea that he moves in favour of the state of Israel above all else should speak volumes to all with a discerning mind.

I'll show you politics in America. Here it is, right here. "I think the puppet on the right shares my beliefs." "I think the puppet on the left is more to my liking." "Hey, wait a minute, there's one guy holding out both puppets!" "Shut up! Go back to bed, America. Your government is in control." Comedian Bill Hicks 1961 – 1994.

We heard first, that Russian interference had a hand in the demise of Hillary Clinton's campaign disaster to Trumps benefit, but in recent weeks we have heard about how Mark Zuckerberg's flagship 'Facepest' (I genuinely think that I have spelled that correctly) has had its database exploited in order to help Trump win!? Are we to believe one or the other? The answer is.....Drum Roll.....

BOTH!

"Oh!" you may well cry "Russia is the aggressor! Look at the recent poisoning incident that took place in the UK & look at what they are doing in Syria! Nasty old Russians eh? Yet, has anyone seen any definitive proof that Russia was responsible for this alleged poison attack? No, of course not! Surely if the Russian state had wanted these people dead, they would be! Instead, last I hear, at least one of the 'poisoned' was actually giving an interview to the press! Can't the Russians get one simple job done without causing international spectatorship? Now, in an astounding show of solidarity in light of the Brexit vote, the E.U. has joined the UK in condemnation of this phoney situation with Russian diplomats being expelled left, right and centre under the pretext of "no evidence what so ever". Please! I grow weary of the charade!

On the same count, you will remember that I mentioned earlier about helping your neighbours should they request it. In Syria, what right do the western powers hold that allows intervention over a sovereign nation in this way? Or in Russia's case, why didn't Putin put direct pressure on the US government or the British in order to back up his ally? Syria can therefore be considered a war by proxy which actually only serves one national interest and it doesn't take any kind of genius to work out that the national interest being served is neither American nor Russian, let alone British. Coupled with that particular and unfortunately common deafening silence concerning the elephant in the room, The resulting terrible conditions created by the conflict also serves to help a whole load of unwanted and probably for the most part, unwilling refugees to flood into European cultural states which 'just so happens' to further the Kalergi Plan. Coincidence? I don't bloody think so!

I consider both countries to be 'on the pay roll' of international finance regardless of how their leaders squabble with each other in the kind of tit for tat, point scoring process that satisfies the media and the gullible populace. This is not to suggest that both men don't wholeheartedly believe in their actions, for in practice there is no beneficial reason that necessitates these figureheads being party to this realisation, indeed their ignorance is beneficial to those who truly hold power. In any case, a leader will only act upon their own advisor's assertions. The overall picture however betrays the fact that these two countries are well and truly 'occupied' from within, sadly, much like our own.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

In a chat with John O. whose article about Rhodesia appears on pages 4 - 5 of this issue I mentioned that I was thinking about introducing some ideas I have about the Green Man in the centre pages of the same issue. It seems I have touched a good nerve here.

Almost immediately he came back to me with the following which I have edited slightly.

Colin,

Green Man is an excellent centre-page feature - 'Wodehawse' as he was known may not have been a mythical figure but actual early refugees from Saxons who fled into the depths of the Wealden forest of almost impenetrable oak, ash and elm. We have a Green Man pub nearby (so in the Roman Anderida Silva) and legends of Wealden dragons abound (last sighting of a giant 'worm' was in early 17th century).

Also charcoal burners who dwelt in the deep forest were known as 'Black Boys' and there is a 'Blackboys' village and pub nearby. (That should be enough to give a Liberal Marxist urbanite rambler a heart attack. With luck. Ed.)

The Anglo - Saxon Chronicle entry for 495 (I think) relates that Aella, the first Bretwalda (High King) of the Saxons stormed the Romano -Briton fortress port of Anderida Castra (Pevensey) and 'did slay all that were therin', so other desperate latinised Celts may well have sought refuge in the dense Wealden Forest (and was the Long Man of Wilmington hewn into downland turf to intimidate them?).

Cheers,
John O.

Ahoy, Captain Sweeny!

I'm glad you like the ball cap. They were standard USN uniform items in 1980s. Not sure what they're wearing today. But yes you are now a Captain! Shiver Me Timbers! Splice the Mainbrace!

When you're get publishing again I'll fetch a few more Caps, and you can "raffle them off" or use 'em as prizes for particularly good CANDOUR contributors

Looking forward to next CANDOUR..

(Sent at the very end of Feb and start of March. Ed)

Very good indeed! Glad to see you smiling with an armful of English Mastiff the Boss! Dog is so immense that he needs a license plate!

Maybe some miracle will bring me to your new local one day to hoist a few! Stranger things have happened.

So please forge forward, carry on! HMS CANDOUR is underway again!

Please contact whenever you wish ... I can help with morale issues, and occasional cash to assist with good projects!

Regards,
Yuri Ex-USN, USA.

Editor: I combined two emails from Yuri for the above. Yuri has been brilliant throughout my trials and tribulations and knows how to lift my mood when I am down.. A long term subscriber Yuri is ex-United States Navy and I am ex-RN so we share some naval banter. (Sweeny is my RN nickname).

Dear Colin,

Many thanks for the latest issue of Candour and your note.

The Tories are rubbish and whether we are out or stay in the EU it will make no difference for us. We will still have the multi - racial society, mass immigration, drugs and crime, cultural poison in the music and art world and the TV brainwashing machine in every living room and kids bedroom and the PC enemy running education from the nursery to university.

Simon Biggs told me a while back that North Shields NF member Robert Batton has died. He stood in North Tyneside mayoral elections a number of times and received good votes, once saving his deposit. Bob was 68 years old and a nice man shocked at what was happening to his country.

Best Wishes,
Gordon.

Above: Bob Batten, centre, with supporters on the campaign trail in the North - East. RIP Bob.

What do you think?
Get writing folks, letters, short or long articles. You will always get an honest opinion and encouragement from the team at Candour. What are you waiting for?

The Editor,

The latest Candour (Issue 870) reprints articles by Jeffrey Hamm and John Tyndall from 1990-91 in which they examine the post war policies of Oswald Mosley and AK Chesterton. Mosley believed in the union of Europe, but he never envisaged the collapse of the Soviet Union or the total abandonment of white rule in Africa. Chesterton was well aware that the British Empire was disintegrating but couldn't have known that global capitalism would take over so quickly and completely. Both policies, the union of Western Europe with white-ruled Africa, and a revived Commonwealth, are now things of the past.

The forty-year row over the European Union is over. We are leaving the EU but Britain will still be controlled by huge international corporations like Google and Microsoft that do not really belong to any country. They operate globally and are so powerful that they can chose where and when they pay their taxes. The global capitalism that was predicted by Mosley and Chesterton has succeeded.

But what about the Commonwealth? A comrade has recently returned from a holiday in Australia. He knows the country well from his youth but he reported that it's now distinctly multiracial. Australia and Canada have paid the price for being dependant on Asia. As I have said many times before, "people follow goods across borders." You can't sign a trade deal with China or India and then refuse entry to their people.

New Zealand is, and always has been, a multiracial country. Auckland is the largest Polynesian city in the world and Pacific Islanders have a right of entry.

South Africa is entering the final phase of 'liberation.' A bill to confiscate white-owned farms is going through parliament and we can expect the rest of the world to turn a blind eye.

Candour does well to try to keep the old White Dominions together but most of the Commonwealth consists of black and brown dictatorships with little or nothing in common with Britain, except the monarchy. But who knows what will happen when the Queen dies.

We cannot choose between a union of Western Europe and white-ruled Africa, or a revived Commonwealth. Mosley and Chesterton have both been overtaken by events. I believe that global capitalism will evolve into a new political and economic dispensation. We can only hope that the natural genius of our race and nation will endure.

Sincerely,
Bill Baillie

Dear Mr. Todd,

Many thanks for this great issue of February (870). Frodo's article on Jorian Jenks was fantastic, it is always great to learn more about the great work of a name that one has heard of, but does not know too much about, but even better when an article points us to further "far-right" reading.

It is quite interesting to also read of him abandoning the use of the term "corporatist".

One day, we will be in a position where I can boldly and openly lay out my stall without indulging in these silly semantical games and I can state my beliefs without risking loss of employ. (One of the most powerful weapons that ZOG weilds against us).

Frodo's article on Stonehenge and how to fix the road issue while preserving and reviving our national treasure. It's certainly very technical and, had you not stated such, I would have no clue that these were her first articles. Please forward my warmest congratulations. (Have done. Ed.)

As for the matter of the relationship between ethnonationalists and our Royal family, it is something that I feel to be of small importance to our struggle.

I say this not to disparage our institutions, but because the problem will necessarily solve itself - providing we defeat ZOG.

The Royal family is the last institute to fall through the cultural Marxist's"long march through the institutions". A Prince could only marry a quadroon if he lived in a sick society that promotes miscegenation.

Royals (regardless of country) are usually an embodiment of their eras' ideas. Some monarchs, of course, are so much more - Emperor Hirohito and King Edward VIII both valiantly stood against Zionism. In times past monarchs have expelled Jews and Blackamoores from our land alone. I dare say our world would be much different had King Edward VIII weilded absolute power.

Once we win the cultural war, we can gain power and once we do it will be our mores that the Royals endorse. And we will win - all surveys report that Generation Z are very right-wing and real news outlets are mushrooming.

Once Queen Elizabeth II passes, we have an idea of how King Charles' government will be. Sadly, he embraces Islam and his enthusiasm for military spending benefits the Jews and not ourselves in these backwards times. However, he will help shift Overtoun's window. He has strongly rebuked Israel, modern architecture and he is keen on environmentalism.

But it doesn't matter. The German Reich survived without the Kaiser, the Italian Social Republic (RSI) survived without King Emmanuel III and, of course, the Confederate States of America (CSA) achieved it's glory without a monarch.

Monarchism is only as good as the era itself - and we live in a time of decay. If the monarchy were to disappear it would neither help nor hinder the struggle for our racial survival. After we have won our struggle a monarchy could be a glorious thing, but until then it is just a sideshow.

I remain a monarchist and I see the left pushing republicanism in an effort to say "See Goy, we are all the same and history is just that - the past". However, I will cast no stones at any rightist who takes a different stance.

Again, many thanks for all the work that you do.

Yours Sincerely,
A. M.

We were impressed that the grandson has the strength and awareness to continue the fight begun by his valiant forefather.

From the preface: "The very idea that this authorised fifth edition of Hidden Government would be in your hands printed all crisp and fresh as a daisy in the 21st C, to me, is both a testament to the author's veracity and at the same time a bitter pill to follow. Seeing, as we have since then, how far things have progressed over the last 60 years in the same vein that Jock describes in this book...."

Some memories of Londonistan

Just to remind us how much has changed in recent years, or for those with the good fortune never to have visited London, I am here writing Farewells to a couple of characters I shall miss.

One fictional. The other not.

When the news that Dave the Barman from the long running comedy drama Minder died recently it felt like losing an old friend. Glynn Edwards was a character actor who appeared in many major movies, Zulu and Get Carter, to name two as well as in hundreds of TV shows. He found his perfect niche as Dave the Barman and owner of the dodgy Winchester Club. The show worked best in the earlier series' when Arthur Daly had Terry as his 'minder'. An old term for muscle. Played by George Cole and Dennis Waterman the show was a huge success with young and old.

Terry, Arthur, Dave.

Looking back on some of the (70's to 80's) shows on youtube, (I threw my TV out some 11 years ago), I was almost shocked by how WHITE the show was. No diversity in their London. How fast the enemy has worked.

Get a box set on DVD if you can of the early series'.

The Crafty Cockney Eric Bristow MBE

Eric was a big man with a big mouth. He talked exactly as he thought and it constantly got him into trouble. The PC snowflakes hated him and his legions of fans in the world of darts adored him. Like the massive white heavy-weight boxer Tyson Fury who is making his comeback now, he was extremely clued up on the reality of our situation but learned the hard way that FREE SPEECH IS DEAD!

He was the man who turned darts from a pub game into a massive business. A real Londoner Eric like most White Londoners who could afford to joined the White Flight. Bristow was only 60 when he died. He lived life hard.

When he moved out of his beloved London saying he had no plans to return he was quoted as saying "I can't speak 27 languages. When you ask someone for directions and they don't speak English, it puts you off a bit."

What a Gay Day to Join the Royal Marines. By the Left quick Mince!

MARINES GO GAY

ROYAL Marines will take part in this year's Gay Pride parade for their first time.

Major General Charlie Strickland, Commandant-General of the Marines, has pledged to support the event in London on July 7.

It comes after the Army's "gender general", Lieutenant-General Patrick Sanders, said he was disappointed the elite green berets failed to take part.

The Army, RAF and rest of the Navy has marched for the past five years.

The 'Bender Agenda' as it is known in what is left of the British Armed Forces is another signpost to amalgamation into a European Armed Force and next the New World Army.
